El expresidente Donald J. Trump y la administración Biden-Harris tienen poca base común en el terreno de las políticas, pero una área inesperada de acuerdo es la idea de que Estados Unidos podría estar listo para un fondo soberano de riqueza.

Estos vehículos de inversión gubernamentales son populares en Asia y Oriente Medio. Permiten a países como China e Arabia Saudita dirigir sus superávits presupuestarios hacia una amplia gama de inversiones y ejercer su influencia financiera en todo el mundo.

Aunque algunos estados individuales tienen sus propias versiones de fondos de riqueza, Estados Unidos, que registra grandes déficits presupuestarios, nunca ha perseguido uno.

La semana pasada, Trump sugirió durante un discurso en el Club Económico de Nueva York que, de ser electo, le gustaría crear un fondo soberano de riqueza estadounidense que pudiera utilizarse "para invertir en grandes empresas nacionales para el beneficio de todos los estadounidenses". Después de los comentarios de Trump, la Casa Blanca indicó que altos funcionarios habían estado trabajando en silencio durante meses en una propuesta para un fondo soberano de riqueza que Biden y su gabinete podrían revisar.
