There are new questions about the financial health of the American private investment company that expects to take over Everton after the Australian airline company, which was recovered and left on the edge of collapse.

777 Partners – which lent Everton more than 200 million in seven months, without success, tried to convince the Premier League to provide the funds to complete a proposal taken by the Toffees – is in the grip of a new crisis in Australia.

Hundreds of passengers were stranded in Australia after an airline company canceled all flights after the reintegration of the four Boeing 737-800s in the morning.

The development blinded the CEO of the airline company and 777 Partners, based in Miami.

777 Partners had a share of the fleet of Bonza, the airline, and routinely moved its 737s from the airline company to Flair.

Nevertheless, in April, AIP Capital – a manager who includes aviation assets such as aircraft and had a majority share of the fleet of partners in the 51%-49% split – announced the development of a new holding to lease Phoenix Aviation Capital. Phoenix announced "a definitive agreement to acquire the rights, interests and obligations of a portfolio of 30 737-800 aircraft from 777 Partners".

"This was a surprise for us and 777 Partners", said the CEO of Bonza, Tim Jordan.

The lease agreements of the company based in Miami were posted under the spotlights, when the four aircraft leased to Flair – three Boeing 737 Max 8s and one 737-800 – were recaptured due to pending taxes.

The lease contracts were terminated, with the reintegration of the four aircraft on March 10, 2024, following two notices that had been issued to Flair on February 16 and 22.

777 Partners are now being persecuted for nearly US$ 30 million in taxes and damages related to the reintegration of Flair. Separately, FLAIR has filed a legal action against the lessors.

The Guardian contacted 777 Partners for comment.
