Líderes mundiales se unen a Ucrania para pedir diálogo y poner fin a la guerra con Rusia

En una cumbre de dos días en Suiza, varios países se unieron a Ucrania el domingo en un llamado por el "diálogo entre todas las partes" para poner fin a la guerra con Rusia. Sin embargo, el presidente de Ucrania, Volodymyr Zelensky, dijo que seguía siendo firme en su oposición a cualquier negociación que pudiera requerir que su país ceda territorio.

La cumbre del fin de semana atrajo a dignatarios de unos 90 países a una estación de esquí en los Alpes suizos; Rusia no fue invitada y, debido a eso, China y Brasil se negaron a participar.

Al final de la reunión, la mayoría de las delegaciones firmaron una declaración de principios compartidos, como promover intercambios de prisioneros y seguridad nuclear.

También dijeron que era necesaria una "participación adicional de los representantes de todas las partes" para continuar, una formulación vaga que subraya la falta de terreno común sobre la pregunta más grande que cuelga sobre la reunión: ¿Cuándo y cómo, Ucrania y Rusia deben buscar negociar la paz?
