Accusation of the Biden administration to Russia for a campaign of disinformation

The Biden administration accused Russia of executing a systematic campaign of disinformation directed at American voters and intended to influence the result of the presidential elections in November.

In sports and soccer accusation more direct of interference in the elections up to now, the government of the USA accused the RT (previously known as Russia Today) and other means of communication of Russian states to lead a covert campaign of disinformation that promotes pro-Kremlin views through its online networks and television.

The Treasury Department also sanctioned the RT editor-in-chief, Margarita Simonyan, and nine other employees of the network for the disinformation campaign in the elections. Simonyan is a "central figure in the efforts of malign influence of the Russian government", said the department.

Recruitment of American influencers

The government of the USA also accused the RT of spending millions of dollars to "recruit American involuntary influencers" to spread a message intended to erode confidence in the USA election system and the objectives of USA foreign policy, including support for Ukraine.

Limitation of visas and declaration of foreign mission

The State Department also announced that it would limit the issuance of visas for some Russian state media employees and declare the Russian state media organization Rossiya Segodnya as a foreign mission, which will require greater disclosures about its employees and assets in the USA.

Reward for information related to foreign interference

The government of the USA also announced an offer of up to 10 million dollars (7.6 million pounds) through the Reward for Justice (RFJ) program related to information about foreign interference in sports and soccer elections in the USA.
