As Rajasthan villages dry up, indios converten camiones en heladerías móviles

Los pueblos yesqueros de Gangapur, en el estado desértico de Rajastán, tienen una nueva temporada en su calendario. Entre noviembre y febrero, los talleres de carrocería a lo largo de la milla larga de mercado polvoriento abren antes del amanecer, los recipientes de acero inoxidable para alimentos se exhiben y los comerciantes almacenan chocolate y jarabes de fresa.

Llegado marzo, los lugareños comienzan a prepararse para emigrar. En los talleres, se convierten miles de vehículos en furgonetas para la venta de variedades de helado, desde el helado condensado con leche sazonado con cardamomo hasta el de chocolate, vainilla y pistacho, mientras que los campesinos locales convertidos en fabricantes de postres tienen sus viejas camionetas miniatura.

El negocio de los helados se ha convertido en una tabla de salvación para los lugareños del noroeste de la India, ya que décadas de escasez de agua han arruinado las cosechas y los medios de vida familiares.

Un nuevo sector laboral

El negocio de los helados ha generado una industria completa en la misma ciudad, dando como resultado una rareza: empleos. El número de talleres de reparación de vehículos y tiendas que venden artículos para heladerías ha aumentado de 50 en 2024 a unas 500 hoy en día.

El viaje de los helados

Cada año, se estima que 50 000 camiones se convierten durante la temporada de cuatro meses. Incluso los impresores locales contratan personal para producir carteles de escúpulas de helado contra un fondo de templos y guerreros locales.

Hay unos 140 millones de migrantes internos en la India: personas que abandonan sus hogares en busca de trabajo en obras de construcción, fábricas o como trabajadores diarios en otros estados. Su decisión de emigrar suele tener raíces en las cada vez más graves pérdidas climáticas en sus lugares de origen.
