"A safe climate is becoming more of a global human right with the decision of the European Court of Justice this week that says: countries must protect people from climate change better than they have in the past", said Mary Robinson. Swiss women said their government was not doing enough to protect them from climate change, but they rejected complaints similar to those of Portuguese youth and a French prefect for technical reasons.

"Many countries in Europe, not all of them, will be vulnerable to litigation in the long run of these lines that their countries are not doing enough to protect human rights", said Robinson in a 30-minute interview with The Associated Press at the Skoll World Forum. A conference on ideas and entrepreneurial spirit: If countries do not protect their people, they can be violating human rights - this is complete climate justice.

"We established the European Court of Human Rights to protect them", said Robinson, who was head of the UN Human Rights Commission from 1997 to 2002. "I find this is an interpretation of reality: people are suffering from climate change; governments are not taking it seriously enough."

The decision brings the concept of a safe climate for developed and rich countries, many of which have been protected from the worst climate consequences, to the contrary of the poor.

Robinson, now one of the main authorities of the group The Elders, a retired leader and former UN leader - she used as an example for the problem that could be forgotten by the North. In seven years as Irish president, she never mentioned climate change; she knew climate change was an important issue but that was not the agency's focus.

It was only when Robinson began working for a non-profit organization in Africa, and she realized the human rights problem.

"Climate change is not as bad in the rich parts of the world. It was that which really impressed me", she said when she worked in Africa, "I want to say: women were saying to me 'God is punishing us?'".

Txai Surui asks a question of a journalist at the Indigenous Peoples' Forum, Sonia Guajajara during the Oxford Skoll World Forum (UK), April 10, 2024.

The Brazilian indigenous environmental activist Txai Surui said it was time: "Our reality is so far from the global north. People hear about the Amazon and listen to indigenous people but they don't know what is really happening on the ground; they don't even understand when we say we are fighting for our lives and bodies."

"We know this is a human right, because we are feeling it on our skin. We are feeling it in our bodies", said Surui during a break at the World Indigenous Forum and it was frustrating when people didn't even notice she was shouting.

para elas notarem a situação."

"Quando vocês fecham os olhos para a nossa realidade, eles nos condenaram e se condenaram", por causa da importância de resolver as mudanças climáticas. E povos indígenas sentem isso mais difícil sporting bet net todo o mundo ", acrescentou ela."

Robinson também destacou uma injustiça básica na mudança climática: "Afeta muito mais cedo, e de forma ainda pior os países pobres; comunidades menos favorecidas – pequenos estados insulares ou indígenas. Dentro disso há um enorme preconceito entre homens por causa dos diferentes papéis sociais das mulheres com acesso diferente ao poder - falta do mesmo."

"A desigualdade está a minar o sistema", disse Robinson. "Está corroendo uma sensação de ser humano juntos neste planeta quando você tem essa incrível riqueza e poder que vai conosco --e tantas pessoas, sentindo monos deixados para trás ou divididos."

Mas Robinson tem esperança porque o Brasil sediará negociações econômicas e climáticas internacionais nos próximos dois anos.

"Tenho muita fé no Brasil ao abordar isso, acho que há uma intenção real de lidar com a desigualdade e sustentabilidade", disse Robinson. Ela também afirmou: governos mundiais estão gastando 1,8 trilhão por ano sporting bet net subsídios para combustíveis fósseis."

Muitos jovens ativistas do clima criticam todo o sistema capitalista pelos danos causados pelo aquecimento. Robinson simpatiza com eles, apontando para as democracias sociais na Irlanda e nas nações nórdica como um caminho melhor".

"Acho que precisamos de um sistema mais justo", disse Robinson. O nosso é uma espécie da forma desenfreada do capitalismo, muito extrativa há bastante tempo e geradora dessas lacunas sporting bet net termos financeiros dentro dos países entre os quais vivemos". Tudo isso contraria a estabilidade social."
