More than a dozen former members of the Ronald Reagan team joined dozens and other Republican figures endorsing the Democratic candidate Kamala Harris, saying that their support was "less about supporting the Democratic Party"

In a letter obtained by CBS News, former advisors and appointees of Reagan – including Ken Adelman, an ambassador to the United Nations (UN) negotiator of arms control, as well as the vice secretary of the press B Jay Cooper – said they would support Harris.

"President Ronald Reagan famously spoke of a 'Time to Choose'. While he is not here, we who work in the White House and in campaign support for Harris-Walz", wrote the group.

"The moment we face today is a choice between integrity and demagoguery, the option should be Harris-Walz", stressed the group. "Our votes in this election are less about supporting Democrats or more about the relationship to our crumbling democracy".

The letter comes as more than 230 former government Republicans also supported Harris. Karl Rove, strategist of the George W Bush campaign and senior advisor wrote "there is no room for this pig" after the debate with Donald Trump

Even though there are more Republicans deserting for Harris than vice versa – Trump won the support of the Democratic Party Robert F Kennedy Jr. and the former congresswoman Tulsi Gabbard – the redefinitions of alignment are increasing".

The conservative columnist George Will said in the Washington Post last week that "a Harris presidency, tempered by a Senate led by Republicans can finally revive a more normal politics".

Will wrote that the result demanded the removal of Donald Trump – "that Krakatau of public life, incoherent and free of facts" –

The former Reagan officials said they were trying to convince former colleagues to support their support for Harris and the Minnesota governor, Tim Walz", as "the only path forward to a strong America".

Other Republicans who support Harris include the former vice president Dick Cheney and his daughter Liz Cheney, a former congresswoman; Stephanie Grisham (press secretary for Trump), Adam Kinzinger [former Republican] or Geoff Duncan. The last three agreed to speak at the Democratic Party event in August of this year".

But few Republicans support Harris over Trump in the political game.

The rival of Trump, Nikki Haley did not support Harris and said she agreed with the policies of the company. But she challenged last week to go further: the former ambassador to the United Nations failed to say whether he thought Donald was a good candidate "I think he is the Republican candidate", replied Haley. "I agree with his style, I agree with his approach? I agree with his communication?"

The former advisor to the vice president of Trump, Mike Pence said before the discussion Harris/Trump in Philadelphia last week that "many people working for Donald Trump said they would not support his return to the presidency. And I think that says a lot about how we know him".
