During the match, Pluribus produces a plan called a blueprint strategy, which is considered as the best move without needing to know its opponents initially. It checks its statistics against those of its current opponents and proposes improvements to the basic strategy when necessary. In this way, Pluribus manages to combine elements of surprise with a solid strategy that cannot be easily exploited.

- Using its blueprint strategy at the start of the games, Pluribus managed to win more than 500 million chips in a few minutes.
- The Pluribus system is so sophisticated that it surpassed the expectations of its creators in terms of success in a highly competitive environment.

Pluribus Funding

According to the magazine Science Daily, Pluribus was developed through a partnership between Facebook AI and two American universities, Carnegie Mellon and UMASS, with a total funding of $5.5 million.
