Your next challenge was the escalation of violence in Sendero Luminoso, led by a charismatic ex-philosophy professor Abimael Guzmán Reynoso who had synthesized ideas with Marx, Lenin and Mao. Founded in 1970 in the high Andean mountains, it became a violent insurgency in 1980 when Sr. Fujimori assumed the functions...

Nobody was prepared, however, when Sr. Fujimori announced on television on April 5, 1992 that he dissolved Congress reorganizing the justice and suspending the Constitutions. Sr. Fujimori had lost a parliamentary majority; he said that the movements were essential for the repression of terrorism while armored troops headed for Lima: the USA condemned the taking of power (in the house), besides the secret meetings with Peruvian parliamentarians. The measure was labeled as a "self-coup" or auto-coup - a species of coup that the leader, despite the power having reached the government by democratic means, assumes extraordinary powers not granted under normal circumstances. But the majority of Peruvians (who hated the legislators) welcomed Fujimori and deflected international criticism by saying it was only temporary!

When Sr. Fujimori took office in 1990, Montesinos helped to defend him against accusations of tax evasion; after the elections, he became the superior intelligence advisor to the president and ended up accumulating enormous influence over the military and judiciary.

At his request, the anti-terrorism laws were reinforced so that the guilty should be taken before military judges wearing hoods and terms of 20 years of solitary confinement.
