Tribunal francés decidirá sobre la autoría de Bolero de Ravel

A French court is about to decide if the famous classic Bolero, one of the most known in the world, was written by Maurice Ravel alone, in a decision with important financial implications.

Ravel premiered Bolero for the first time in the Opera of Paris in 1928 and it was an immediate success. He died ten years later and his heirs won millions of dollars until the author's right expired in 2024 and the work passed to the public domain.

In France, the author's right usually lasts 70 years after the death of a composer, although some additional years were added to compensate for losses during the Second World War.

The heirs of Alexandre Benois, a famous scenographer who worked on the premiere of Bolero, claim that he should be credited as co-author from the beginning and demand a share of the income. Since Benois died in 1960, this would place Bolero under new author's rights until 2039.

A lawyer from Benois's estate told a French court in February that "the music of Bolero was created specifically for the ballet" and should not be considered as an independent piece of music.

La herencia de Ravel apoya la afirmación de que fue una "obra colaborativa" con el escenógrafo ruso, no solo de Ravel, en parte porque volvería a recibir pagos de derechos de autor. Los demandantes señalan varios documentos que nombran a Benois como coautor de la música. Por otro lado, la Sociedad de Autores, Compositores y Editores de Música de Francia (Sacem) afirma que la demanda se basa en una "ficción histórica". Sacem señala una declaración oficial firmada por Ravel en 1929 que identifica a este último como el único autor.

El abogado de Sacem dijo que los derechos habían generado "millones y millones de euros" al año, aunque esto había caído a un promedio de €135,507 al año entre 2011 y 2024.
