Live Poker vs Online Poker

The most obvious difference between live poker and online poker is the pace of the game. Online poker often sees 60 to 100 hands per hour, whereas you might only get 30 hands per hour at a live table. Online players can also choose to play multi-tables.

You can try to read your opponents and figure out their tells when playing live poker, but that is largely eliminated online. On the flipside, you can use tracking software and other valuable tools to help you gain an edge when playing at a poker website.

Online Poker Tournaments

Online poker tournaments provide you with the opportunity to test yourself against fellow players in a wide range of formats. The online poker sites take a small fee for hosting the games, and simply bring players together to battle it out for glory.

Online poker tournaments range from free-to-enter events offering modest prizes to GGPoker's WSOP online poker festival, which generated a prize pool worth R$27,559,500 in 2024. You can play in multi-table tournaments, or quicker Sit & Go events that are typically wrapped up within an hour.

The variety is very exciting. You can choose from freezeout tournaments that only permit a single entry or rebuy tournaments that allow you to get back into the action if you crash and burn. There are deepstacks for players that enjoy a measured pace and hyper-turbo games for players that prefer breakneck action. You can play bounty hunter games and progressive KO tournaments, where you are rewarded for eliminating rival players, along with shootout tournaments, satellite events and major series.

In each case, the rules will be explained clearly before you begin playing, and these online poker sites guarantee the fairness, security and safety of each game.

Free Poker vs Real Money Poker

You can take part in free-to-enter tournaments known as freerolls by visiting the best poker sites. These poker tournaments sometimes offer cash prizes, or they may provide the winners with free entry into cash tournaments, or merchandise. Some poker sites require you to earn loyalty points by entering real-money games and then use them to gain entry into freerolls.

Freerolls are great for beginners. You can find several licensed, , because they essentially provide players with free site credit in a bid to win prizes, just like a casino bonus.

Real money poker is an entirely different prospect. You will be required to deposit funds into your online poker account and use your money to buy your way into poker tournaments. If you are successful in these real money tournaments, you will be paid out in cash. You can then use your winnings for more tournament entries or withdraw them at any time.

You can alternatively send a direct bank transfer to poker sites, or use an e-wallet such as , Skrill, Neteller or ecoPayz. Some accept PaySafeCard prepaid vouchers, where you buy a card in a shop and enter a code to fund your account. Some also accept pay by phone, where you can top

Poker Rake

This is the fee that the website hosting the poker room takes as a commission. That is how poker sites make money and pay for their operating costs.

In poker tournaments, it is typically a percentage of the tournament fee, and it can go all the way up to 20% on certain events. In cash games, rake can be collected via several different methods. The most common is the pot rake, which can range from 2.5% to 10% of the pot in each hand, typically up to a predetermined maximum amount.

There may alternatively be a time collection, whereby the site takes a set fee from each player at specific intervals of the game, such as every 30 minutes. Dead drop is another way to collect the rake. This means that every player pays the same fee, rather than just the winning players. There are also fixed fees, tournament fees, and no rake tournaments.

The higher the rake, the lower your expected value, which can change your strategy. For example, many players feel compelled to play a tighter style when the rake is higher.

Explore More Cards Games

Poker is an exceedingly popular card game, but you can also broaden your repertoire by playing several different table games, such as blackjack and baccarat. The best also offer exciting games like live roulette, craps, bingo, slots, and live gameshow-style titles like Deal or No Deal, Monopoly Live and Dream Catcher, plus slightly more obscure games including Sic Bo, Pai Gow, Fan Tan and Casino War.

Many great online poker sites have separate online casino sections that allow you to play these games. For example, you can enjoy 888poker, 888casino and 888sport in one place, while sites like Bet365, Ladbrokes, Coral and Paddy Power have an online casino alongside the online poker room.
