The average temperature in August in China was 22.6 °C, 1.5 °C higher than the same period in a typical year, marking a record high since 1961.

The China Meteorological Administration said on Thursday, Jia Xiaolong, vice director of the National Climate Center, said that during the period, it ended as regions in the north experienced frequent episodes.

Most of the region of Jianghuai, the area of the high temperatures and the Sichuan province registered more than 15 consecutive days of rain.

Jianghuai refers to the area around the lower reaches of the Huai River and the Yangtze River in Jiangsu, Anhui and Henan provinces.

"Seventeen national meteorological stations, including the Yiwu (42.8 °C) station in Zhejiang province, recorded daily temperatures that reached or exceeded historical records", Jia said.

In terms of precipitation, Jia said that the national average for August was 97.7 mm, 9.5% less than the same period in a normal year, with the lowest amounts in the south.

He also said that 101 national meteorological stations reached extreme quartiles of daily precipitation, with 14 states included in the public record, including Yangshan (241.2 mm), a record high.

In the first 10 days, the China Meteorological Administration predicts that the north of the country will experience three competition events and a moderate amount of rain. In addition, it is necessary to compare the differences between the two countries:

The accumulated precipitation in the Tianshan Mountains region, the autonomous Uygur region of Xinjiang in the northwest of China and the 30 nearest locations for our clients worldwide.

"The accumulated precipitation in these regions is 20 to 70 percent higher than the same period in a normal year, with some zones receiving more natural rainfall", Jia observed.

He warned that heavy rain and the climate in these areas could trigger secondary disasters, such as crop damage.
