Joaquin Phoenix abandona drama gay dirigido por Todd Haynes

According to Indiewire, Variety and Deadline, actor Joaquin Phoenix supposedly abandoned a new gay drama directed by Todd Haynes, just five days before it was to begin filming.

It is reported that Phoenix has "stage fright" and that the project has been canceled completely, with no plans to recast the role.

Phoenix was set to star alongside the actor from Top Gun: Maverick, Danny Ramirez, in a love story set in the 1930s with "explicit sexual content". It was expected that the film would receive the controversial NC-17 rating due to the sexual scenes.

Last year, Haynes, while promoting his drama Natalie Portman and Julianne Moore May December, said that the film "defies sexual relationship" between the two men.

"What was really notable is that it all began with Joaquin who had some ideas and some thoughts and just questions and images", said Haynes to Variety. "And he said, 'Does this connect to you in absolute?' And I said, 'Yes, it's really interesting'".

Added that Phoenix was the one who "pushed more into danger, sexually".

The film was scheduled to be produced by the long-time collaborator of Haynes, Christine Vachon. It is reported that the crew members in Mexico are now waiting to be paid before the production is officially closed.

Now it is said that Haynes is focusing on an adaptation of the Pulitzer Prize-winning novel by Hernan Diaz Trust for HBO. The project will be a reunion for Haynes and Kate Winslet, who previously starred in his adaptation in the 2011 miniseries Mildred Pierce.

Phoenix, last seen in the film Napoleon by Ridley Scott, recently finished otra película con el director de Beau Is Afraid, Ari Aster, llamada Eddington junto a Emma Stone. Su esperada secuela de Joker está programada para estrenarse en el próximo Festival de Cine de Venecia.

El Guardián se ha comunicado con los representantes de Haynes, Vachon y Phoenix para comentarios.
