EU leaders gave the green light to extra tariffs on Chinese electric vehicles, despite opposition from five countries including Germany.

The European Commission – which provisionally approved the vbet kenya measure in June, after an inquiry found state aid from China to car manufacturers unfair – now has the freedom to impose tariffs for five years from the end of this month.

Tariffs of up to 35.3% were supported by 10 member states including France and Italy.

Only five countries, including Germany and Hungary which have investment promises from China, voted against the decision by the Chinese government while 12 abstained. BMW said it was a "fatal signal" for the European automotive industry, while VW affirmed it was a misguided approach.

The German automotive industry association, VDA, also reacted to the vbet kenya decision saying that the vote against the tariffs was a "clear signal" for that company. Opposition from car manufacturers led to some criticism of the fact that they are being united with China and not standing behind European policies – which condemned the votes as protectionist.

"We strongly encourage the EU (...) to postpone the implementation of these tariffs and prioritize resolving disputes, commercial conflicts through consultations or dialogue", said vbet kenya. Although the tariffs did not have the support of the majority of states, the opposition was insufficient to block them – which would require an objection from at least 15 nations representing 65% of the bloc.

This leaves the choice of moving forward in the hands of the commission, which "can be expected to decide on the vbet kenya line with the vbet kenya proposal", said a European diplomat. Extra duties also apply to vehicles made in China by foreign groups such as Tesla 7.9%. Brussels says the measures aim to protect European car manufacturers, a critical industry with 14 million jobs in the EU but which does not benefit from heavy state subsidies like China.

In recent months, Canada and the USA imposed much higher tariffs of 100% on Chinese imports.

EU duties put France and Germany against each other, with Paris arguing that they are necessary to level the playing field for European car manufacturers vbet kenya relationship with Chinese colleagues. The taxes will take effect from the start of November and will remain for at least five years. The 7.9% extra taxes on Tesla cars made in China will be 35% for cars made by the conglomerate SAIC including the British MG...
