EL
Like most people, I never had a particularly intimate relationship with my feet. They get me places and occasionally give me a headache – that's it! I consider them approximately equal to elbows – anti-glamorous but primarily functional – or at least that's what I discovered on Wikifeet (in English). If you are not yet familiar with Wikifeet, think of it as an online directory of feet of celebrities, lovingly maintained by a volunteer fetishist team. I stumbled upon it in 2024 while trying to research on Google who had their feet in a fashion industry event and there I found my own: on eccentric sites like 20m considered movies for people with few monthly views; naturally, I assumed I would also be a target of the stars! My profile showed photos of my feet from nine years ago, on vacation with friends. In the end, the insult: after browsing my accounts on social media for any images of my feet, anonymous Wikifeet users classified me as a 3.5 out of 5 – a whole and a half stars less than Knives Out starring Ana De Armas (According to WikiLeaks), that's my feet "OK". The sexualization of my lower digits was not sufficient. For a pat on the head and saying "good attempt" was a great indignity, my perfectionist interior chided: "If I have perverts looking at my feet that I like! I want them to like them!" I don't have anything against people who do this with their feet, that's the same way I do bungee jumping: theoretically I can see why you can do it but it's not for me. But the idea of people without faces looking at my feet – maybe zooming in on my teeth and I never managed to cut a uniform point – that made me feel extremely self-conscious? I started cutting them off, damn it, to my own detriment! "Call me a sexist, but the idea that women appreciate my feet made me feel a little less scared" – Zing Tsjeng.

I realize that this is ridiculous, I no longer understand the "sexy foot" in the same way as I don't have an idea of what a beautiful elbow is (I'm supposing I'm thinking: free from joanets is also far from that). Even so, I was classified by my disappointing classification as sufficient to post about it on Instagram. "Only OK?" I questioned with false indignation? When I checked a week later my ranking had risen to four out of five years and I earned a respectable tag of "beautiful feet". Clearly some people who followed my Instagram were already on the page – I just didn't expect to be known personally by them!
Later, I discovered that – contrary to my assumption – women really do

22% da audiência Wikifeet. Chame-me sexista ; mas a ideia de mulher apreciar meus pés me fez sentir um pouco menos assustada para fora porque eu presumo Mulheres podem ser mais propensos olhar com aprovação aos seus passos por espírito fraternal e afinal estávamos sujeitos às mesmas opressivas padrões podal beleza embora ainda acho incompreensível Embora eu saiba que mudar minha aparência para evitar o olhar do site de fetiche da internet é uma empresa levemente ridícula e inútil, agora me sinto menos envergonhado com isso dado ao fato disso estar perfeitamente na tendência – a geração Z também odeia sair dos pés. Ajuda que um usuário deixou uma comentário altamente complementar, onde se lê "pés longos incrivelmente atraentes e dedos compridos sport 24 live pé longo muito engraçado", o qual pelo menos me faz pensar algumas dessas pessoas sem nome na internet também apreciam minha personalidade (obrigado Feetgrinder). Dois anos depois eu sou capaz para ver a parte engraçada do estar no Wikifeets. Eu até tenho meu olho sobre alguns pares das sandálias dos pescadores não espere por eles on-line 'porem férias embora "!
